Like other social institutions the American Catholic parish has suffered from the sociological curse of our times hugeness complexity a breakdown of community life anonymity on the part of members lack of participation and the impact of changing social structures In face of the breaking up of nationality parishes in large urban centers and the development of new parishes in the suburbs new pastoral methods are being called into play in an attempt to bridge the gap between priest and people and make of our parishes living communities For several years Father Leo R Ward of the University of Notre Dame always a perceptive observer and analyst has been visiting significant Catholic parishes across the country where constructive new developments are taking place In the Living Parish Father Ward reports on what he found on visits to eleven dioceses and nine states from New York to Colorado to Mississippi The new life he has discovered consists partly in action inclusive of the liturgy and partly in attitudes The clergy and laity he contacted are interested in understanding and living a Catholic life New parishes suburban parishes downtown parishes are huge urban parishes middle class and poor parishes interracial parishes and rural parishes this is a quick cross section of American Catholic life Father Ward unfolds before us Modern developments within the Church in America are seen as they come alive at the parochial level Publisher Living Church ,1921
