This study assessed the current state of specialized training in master-level social work programs self-identified as either an aging specialization, concentration, or certificate. Fifty-nine identified gerontological social work programs responded to this survey (92.2% response rate). Compared with findings from similar previous studies in the 1980s, results revealed a decline in the number of graduate level aging-related social work programs. Study findings revealed similarities and significant differences among concentration, specialization, and certificate aging-related programs. Results suggest that much variation among aging-specific programs exists and greater standardization may be needed. Implications for social work education, practice, and research are discussed.

There are an unprecedented 34.5 million people 65 and older (12.6% of the population) in the United States (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000), with estimates that this cohort will grow to better than 20% by 2030 (Administration on Aging, 2000). Social work has been recognized as having great potential in assisting aging adults and the late-life family
