The Physiology of the Novel Nicholas Dames, 2007-09-27 How did the Victorians read novels Nicholas Dames answers that deceptively simple question by revealing a now forgotten range of nineteenth century theories of the novel a range based in a study of human physiology during the act of reading He demonstrates the ways in which the Victorians thought they read and uncovers surprising responses to the question of what might have transpired in the minds and bodies of readers of Victorian fiction His detailed studies of novel critics who were also interested in neurological science combined with readings of novels by Thackeray Eliot Meredith and Gissing propose a vision of the Victorian novel reader as far from the quietly immersed being we now imagine as instead a reader whose nervous system was addressed attacked and soothed by authors newly aware of the neural operations of their public Rich in unexpected intersections from the British response to Wagnerian opera to the birth of speed reading in the late nineteenth century The Physiology of the Novel challenges our assumptions about what novel reading once did and still does to the individual reader and provides new answers to the question of how novels influenced a culture's way of reading responding and feeling an adventure of intellect and creativity Children's learning speeds vary and this isn't a flaw but rather a reflection of each individual's growth rhythm When we are willing to respect these differences and utilize various learning strategies children's potential can gradually be unearthed In the past we might have only focused on grades and outcomes but modern brain science tells us that the essence of learning lies in the development and activation of brain structures Activities seemingly unrelated to academics such as exercise meditation and even sleep can significantly boost learning efficiency Appropriate levels of stress and relaxation can help children overcome difficulties while diverse techniques like spaced practice concentrated practice visual memory auditory learning and even body code memory methods can simultaneously enhance memory and comprehension Furthermore building learning motivation cultivating speed reading abilities mastering efficient reading techniques and improving presentation and note taking skills are all indispensable keys for children to move towards independent learning Every child can discover their unique intellectual strengths as long as we are willing to accompany guide and experiment This journey of exploration has given me a brand new appreciation for learning I hope every parent and child will be brave enough to try different learning methods and find the path that suits them best After all learning is a lifelong endeavor the starting point isn't what matters continuous progress is key
