

Economic Rationalism and Consumption : Islamic Perspective

Rasharat Hossain¹

Abstract

This paper presents a comparative view of Islamic economic rationalism and consumption framework to its counterpart's conventional capitalist and capitalist economic system. In conventional economic system, only self-interest and rationality of the consumer is the main principle to maximize utility whereas moral, religious, national, historical, cultural and social values are absent here. Consequently, the consumer enjoys sovereignty with little or no intervention of regulatory authority to maximize the utility. On the contrary, Islamic economic system develops its rationality and consumption principle in moderation that is far away from atomism where freedom and regulation is moderately recognized. Therefore, Islamic rationality encourages the consumer to maximize his utility by having religious, national, historical, cultural and social values. Besides, conventional economics have no treatment to immoral activities of consumer while Islamic economics derived from the Shari' Quran and Hadith offers rewards and punishments for moral and immoral activities in worldly and hereafter life.

Key words: Rationalism, Consumption, Islamic Economics, Consumer Sovereignty, Moral and Social Values

1. Introduction

The evolution of economics describes that the prime goal of Economics theories is to fulfill the consumer's satisfaction regardless whether it is approved or not by the laws of the ethics or religion (Robbins, 1935, Sen, 1980, Gossenwergen, 1996, Paul & Stavros, 2009). In addition, in economics decision making, Conventional economics emphasize on the self-interest and the rationality of the consumer whereas Islamic economics accentuates on the social and moral values, scale of welfare etc.
