Assistive Technology Helps Students Compensate for Reading Difficulties

Amy G. Dell*The College of New JerseyDeborah NewtonUniversity of Southern Connecticut*

Assistive technology can help students with reading disabilities access information. This Technology in Action directs you to tools and resources designed for this purpose.

The ability to read and understand written and electronic text is critical for academic success. On a daily basis, students are required to read and comprehend a variety of written and electronic materials such as textbooks, workbooks, literary works, newspaper and journal articles, Internet information, and reference materials. Problems can occur when the reading level of these materials is beyond student skill (Boyle, Washburn, Rosenberg, Connelly, Brinckerhoff, & Banerjee, 2002). Students who struggle with reading comprehension have difficulty completing their assignments and often fall behind in their work. This can be frustrating and stressful, and it can hinder learning (Stahl, 2004).

Some high school students compensate for their reading disabilities by having their reading materials read to them

(Dell, Newton, & Petroff, 2008). Some students confide that they rarely complete their reading assignments and “get by” by paying attention to class lectures. These same students often are unable to complete their reading assignments on their own when they attend college or hold a job.

Assistive technology (AT) can help students compensate for reading difficulties. Compensation differs from remediation—a topic in another Technology in Action (Newton & Dell, 2009)—in which tools are used to help students learn to read. With compensation, students are provided with tools that allow them to access information. This Technology in Action explores AT that compensates for reading disabilities. Topics include the following:

- Scan/read systems. A sampling of available systems is provided.

Action H A Davison, A. Davison, 2013-09-05 First published in 1982 Routledge is an imprint of Taylor Francis an informa company Scientific and Technical Aerospace Reports, 1994 Information Technology in Action Richard Y. Wang, 1993 Written by well known industry participants this book offers a unique presentation on the trends and perspectives of the information technology industry It covers the ER approach the object database in action visual access systems data quality management and more Foresight in Action Marjolein van Asselt, Susan van 't Klooster, Philip van Notten, Livia A. Smits, 2012-06-25 Assessing the future is vital in informing public policy decisions One of the most widespread approaches is the development of scenarios which are alternative hypothetical futures Research has indicated however that the reality of how professionals go about employing scenarios is often starkly at odds with the theory a finding that has important ramifications for how the resulting images of the future should be interpreted It also shows the need for rewriting and updating theory This book based on an intensive five year study of how experts actually go about assessing the future provides a groundbreaking examination of foresighting in action Obtained via ethnographic techniques the results lay bare for the first time the real processes by which scenarios are made It is also the first book to examine foresighting for public policy which is so often overlooked in favour of business practice From handling of discontinuity to historical determinism the analysis reveals and explains why foresight is difficult and what the major pitfalls are Each chapter ends with a toolkit of recommendations for practice The book aims to help readers to reflect on their own practices of public oriented foresight and thus to foster a deeper understanding of the key principles and challenges Ultimately this will lead to better informed decision making Monthly Catalog of United States Government Publications, 1994
