Telecommunications In Canada An Analysis Of Outlook And Trends:

Telecommunications in Canada Steven Globberman, Deborah Carter, Fraser Institute (Vancouver, B.C.), 1988 From the back cover The telecommunications industry in several important and dramatic ways does not fit the stereotype of a service industry In particular it is a relatively capital intensive industry that has enjoyed well above average rates of productivity growth Technological changes affecting the industry in recent years have been marked and have spawned new communications activities such as cellular radio The employment growth generated in the industry has been associated with an increase in average educational levels rather than a significant deskilling that numerous observers of the service sector worry about The prospects are for continued performance along these lines However continued government restrictions on competition in the industry could thwart the realization of many of the benefits of productivity and technological change on both the supply and demand sides of the market

Mussio, 2001 Mussio is a communications consultant who traces how Canada handled expansion in telecommunications and the arrival of the computer in the three critical decades following World War II Like technological transformations in transportation and utilities the spread of new communications systems forced governments to respond in continental Europe and the UK they asserted control and ownership of national telecommunication networks In the US private companies were permitted to manage systems and provide services In Canada both models were adopted and domestic hybrids combining both also flourished Distributed in the US by Cornell University Services c Book News Inc
