Television Audience:

Television and Its Audience Patrick Barwise, Andrew Ehrenberg, 1988-11-24 This book by two leading experts takes a fresh look at the nature of television starting from an audience perspective It draws on over twenty years of research about the audience in the United States and Britain and about the many ways in which television is funded and organized around the world The overall picture which emerges is of a medium which is watched for several hours a day but usually at only a low level of involvement an audience which views mainly for relaxation but which actively chooses favourite programmes a flowering of new channels but with no fundamental change in what or how people watch programmes costing millions to produce but only a few pennies to view a wide range of programme types apparently similar to the range of print media but with nothing like the same degree of audience segmentation a global communication medium of dazzling scale speed and impact but which is slow at conveying complex information and perhaps less powerful than generally assumed The book is packed with information and insights yet is highly readable It is unique in relating so many of the issues raised by television to how we watch it There is also a highly regarded appendix on advertising as well as technical notes a glossary and references for further reading

The Soviet Television Audience David E. Powell, 1975

Television Audiences Across the World J. Bourdon, C. Méadel, 2014-01-24 This book is the first to deal with the world composition of television ratings It focuses on the peoplemeter a 25 year old technology which succeeds in homogenizing very different populations and television practices It provides a fascinating account of the production of figures on which the whole world of popular culture depends

Desperately Seeking the Audience Ien Ang, 2006-06-28 Millions of people all over the world are avid members of the television audience Yet despite the central place television occupies in contemporary culture our understanding of its complex and dynamic role in everyday life remains surprisingly limited Focusing on the television audience Ien Ang asks why we understand so little about its nature and argues that our ignorance arises directly out of the biases inherent in prevailing official knowledge about it She sets out to deconstruct the assumptions of this official knowledge by exploring the territory where it is mainly produced the television institutions Ang draws on Foucault's theory of power knowledge to scrutinize television's desperate search for the audience and to identify differences and similarities in the approaches of American commercial television and European public service television to their audiences She looks carefully at recent developments in the field of ratings research in particular the controversial introduction of the people meter as an instrument for measuring the television audience By defining the limits and limitations of these institutional procedures of knowledge production Ien Ang opens up new avenues for understanding television audiences Her ethnographic perspective on the television audience gives new insights into our television culture with the audience seen not as an object to be controlled but as an active social subject engaging with television in a variety of cultural and creative ways
