

The painting depicts a woman, the Lady of Shalott, seated in a room with a large, ornate, orange-colored chair. She is looking out of a window, her face pale and her expression one of longing or sorrow. The room is dimly lit, with a patterned rug on the floor and a small table with a vase and flowers in the foreground. The overall style is characteristic of the Pre-Raphaelite movement, with its emphasis on color and narrative.
