

Introduction to Plants

Plants are multicellular eukaryotic organisms with the ability to produce their own food by the process of photosynthesis. (They are autotrophs.) Algae have historically been included with the plants, but they are now classified with the protists. The modern definition of plants includes organisms that live primarily on land (and sometimes in water), excluding algae that live primarily in water.

Another distinguishing characteristic of plants is their type of chloroplast. Chloroplasts are used to store energy from the sun during the process of photosynthesis. They have a structure called a thylakoid. In most other species of algae the sun's energy is stored in these structures, but in plants the sun's energy is stored in the chloroplasts.

Plants are divided into three groups: nonvascular plants and vascular plants. Nonvascular plants are simple, unbranched plants that lack a vascular system. Vascular plants are more complex plants. The chloroplasts in the vascular system are located in the cells of the vascular system. There are three main groups of vascular plants: the seedless vascular plants, the angiosperms, and the gymnosperms. The seedless vascular plants are the simplest, and the gymnosperms are the most complex. The angiosperms are the most complex, and the gymnosperms are the simplest.
