Studying Those Who Study Us Diana E. Forsythe, 2022 Diana E Forsythe was a leading anthropologist of science technology and work and especially of the field of artificial intelligence This volume collects her best known essays along with other major works that remained unpublished upon her death in 1997 The essays proceed as a series of developing variations on the key questions that still confront science and technology studies today What assumptions do expert systems designers make about users and about knowledge more broadly when they build software How should humans interact with computers and how do they really Why do computing firms hire anthropologists to study human computer interaction and what do anthropologists find once they are hired And how and why are traditional power asymmetries between men and women produced and maintained in engineering firms and laboratories The book is not only a significant anthropological study of artificial intelligence and informatics but is also an exemplar of how reflexive ethnography should be done Among several pioneering strands of thought it investigates the roles of gender and power in computer engineering looking at the cultural mechanisms that support the persistent male domination of engineering and analyzing the laboratory as a fictive kin group that reproduces gender asymmetries

At the Edge of AI Libuše Hannah Veprek, 2024-08-02 How are human computation systems developed in the field of citizen science to achieve what neither humans nor computers can do alone Through multiple perspectives and methods Libuše Hannah Veprek examines the imagination of these assemblages their creation and everyday negotiation in the interplay of various actors and play science entanglements at the edge of AI Focusing on their human technology relations this ethnographic study shows how these formations are marked by intraversions as they change with technological advancements and the actors goals motivations and practices This work contributes to the constructive and critical ethnographic engagement with human AI assemblages in the making

The Oxford Handbook of Ethics of AI Markus D. Dubber, Frank Pasquale, Sunit Das, 2020-06-30 This volume tackles a quickly evolving field of inquiry mapping the existing discourse as part of a general attempt to place current developments in historical context at the same time breaking new ground in taking on novel subjects and pursuing fresh approaches The term AI is used to refer to a broad range of phenomena from machine learning and data mining to artificial general intelligence The recent advent of more sophisticated AI systems which function with partial or full autonomy and are capable of tasks which require learning and intelligence presents difficult ethical questions and has drawn concerns from many quarters about individual and societal welfare democratic decision making moral agency and the prevention of harm This work ranges from explorations of normative constraints on specific applications of machine learning algorithms today in everyday medical practice for instance to reflections on the potential status of AI as a form of consciousness with attendant rights and duties and more generally still on the conceptual terms and frameworks necessarily to understand tasks requiring intelligence whether human or AI

Learning Trajectories, Innovation and Identity for Professional Development Anne Mc Kee,Michael Eraut,2011-09-18 Educators in the professions have always had unique demands placed upon them These include the need to keep pace with rapidly evolving knowledge bases developing skills and attitudes appropriate to practice learning in the workplace and fostering public confidence For twenty years these new demands have created additional educational imperatives Public accountability has become more intensive and extensive Practitioners practice in climates more subject to scrutiny and less forgiving of error The contexts in which professionals practice and learn have changed and these changes involve global issues and problems Often professionals are the first responders who are required to take an active stance in defining and solving problems This book explores the pedagogic implications of these challenges internationally for a wide range of professions which include accountants military company commanders surgeons nurse practitioners academic managers community physicians and dentists The established view of professional development is about what the professional knows and can do The authors broaden this view to include the systemic and contextual factors that affect learning and the conditions necessary for effective practice and identity development across the professional lifespan Authors examine the unique particularities and requirements of diverse professional groups The editors emphasize new ideas and learning that emerges across the professions As readers use this book as a pathway to their own innovations in scholarship and pedagogic research they join their colleagues in supporting new directions in learning teaching and assessment across professions This book was awarded the Outstanding Research Publication award for 2012 by the American Educational Research Association's Division I Education in the Professions p

Studying Virtual Math Teams

Gerry Stahl, 2010-05-03 Studying Virtual Math Teams centers on detailed empirical studies of how students in small online groups make sense of math issues and how they solve problems by making meaning together These studies are woven together with materials that describe the online environment and pedagogical orientation as well as reflections on the theoretical implications of the findings in the studies The nature of group cognition and shared meaning making in collaborative learning is a foundational research issue in CSCL More generally the theme of sense making is a central topic in information science While many authors allude to these topics few have provided this kind of detailed analysis of the mechanisms of intersubjective meaning making This book presents a coherent research agenda that has been pursued by the author and his research group The book opens with descriptions of the project and its methodology as well as situating this research in the past and present context of the CSCL research field The core research team then presents five concrete analyses of group interactions in different phases of the Virtual Math Teams research project These chapters are followed by several studies by international collaborators discussing the group discourse the software affordances and alternative representations of the interaction all using data from the VMT project The concluding chapters address implications for the theory of group cognition and for the methodology of the learning sciences In addition to substantial introductory and concluding chapters this important new book includes analyses based upon the author's previous research thereby providing smooth continuity and an engaging flow that follows the progression of the research The VMT project has dual goals a to provide a source of experience and data for practical and theoretical explorations of group knowledge building and b to develop an effective online environment and educational service for collaborative learning of mathematics Studying Virtual Math Teams reflects these twin orientations reviewing the intertwined aims and development of a rigorous science of small group cognition and a Web 2.0 educational math service It documents the kinds of interactional methods that small groups use to explore math issues and provides a glimpse into the potential of online interaction to promote productive math discourse
