Faustino Manso has just died leaving seven wives and eighteen children scattered across southern Africa. His youngest daughter, Laurentina, arrives in Angola from her home in Portugal to trace the story of the father she never knew. My Father's Wives is the story of Laurentina's journey, but this fiction also runs in parallel with José Eduardo Agualusa's story of the novel's genesis as writer and characters travel the southern African coast from Angola through Namibia and South Africa to Mozambique, meeting extraordinary people and discovering Faustino's secrets along the way. This novel heralds the rebirth of Africa, a continent afflicted by terrible problems but blessed with a talent for music by the ever renewed strength of its women and the secret power of ancient gods.
