Abstract. In modern conditions, mediation has been increasingly becoming the subject of discussion to determine its place in the social sciences. In this regard, the need for an analysis of the social sciences, which are most closely related to mediation, will be updated. The aim of the article was to determine the structural components of the concept of "mediation" and to determine the place of mediation in the system of social sciences. The main problem in determining the place of mediation in the social sciences is the lack of a unified approach to this issue. Used the content analysis, the following components of the concept of "Mediation" have been identified: process, conflict, mediator, parties. It was found that mediation is an interdisciplinary science, which is at the junction of a number of social sciences: law, economics, sociology, and psychology. Based on the results of the study was made conclusions: today, mediation does not have its definite and fixed place in the system of social sciences. It has been established that at present mediation cannot be considered only within the framework of one science. The scientific results obtained in the study could serve as the basis for the development of the conceptual foundations of mediation and the disclosure of the practical potential of this process in conflict resolution.

Introduction. Today, mediation is increasingly the subject of debate over its place in the social sciences. The development of society creates the need for a more civilized and effective resolution of new conflicts. Today's old institutions of conflict resolution are no longer relevant and do not cope with new challenges. Society needs an effective and rapid resolution of emerging conflicts. It is to solve this problem and there are alternative ways to resolve conflicts. Traditionally, they include: mediation, expert determination, negotiation, facilitated negotiation, conciliation, arbitration, med-arb, adjudication, mini-trial, fact-finding, dispute review boards, private judging, early neutral evaluation, multi-door courthouse, settlement conference, summary jury trial, etc. As we can see, mediation is only one of the types of alternative dispute resolution. Mediation occupies a special place in this system because it is characterized by the participation of a third neutral, impartial, and uninterested in this conflict party - the mediator. The benefits of using mediation are that disputes can be resolved quickly, thus lessening the strain on relationships. As the process of mediation is much faster, the cost is much lower than the costs of litigation. The process is entirely confidential. Thus the conflict is not exposed to public view and information is kept private. Mediation is conducted in an informal setting (García-Raga, Grau & López-Martín, 2017; Lezak, Ahearn, McConnell & Stenberg, 2019; Li, Li & Lin, 2019; Agapiou, 2015). The parties can be more relaxed. Since the emphasis is on problem-solving, mediation is non-confrontational. The parties find their own solutions through the facilitation of the mediator and therefore, the solutions are usually more workable and permanent.
