

Microbial stress response and adaptation are essential for the growth, survival, and differentiation of cells. The response to the presence of a stressor can be divided into two categories: (1) the response to the stressor itself, and (2) the response to the stressor-induced changes in the environment. The response to the stressor itself is the response to the stressor-induced changes in the environment, and the response to the stressor-induced changes in the environment is the response to the stressor-induced changes in the environment. The response to the stressor-induced changes in the environment is the response to the stressor-induced changes in the environment.

These processes vary depending on the circumstances (the amount of a substance in a given volume of water, the temperature, the pressure and other environmental factors).

Glucagon, the secret of the α -cells, gives an information about the food and about the time consumed. Islets include the primary gustatory receptors with each taste bud containing chemoreceptors called gustatory cells. Three taste buds have been recognized: sweet, sour, bitter and salty. A 1998 paper, glucagon as taste, has been reported. This paper is associated with sweet taste, as in itself, sweet is a taste itself.

The sense of smell is called olfaction, or the detection of odors. Olfaction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or olfactory neurons, located within the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to recognize small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be detected. The brain interprets the input from several different receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

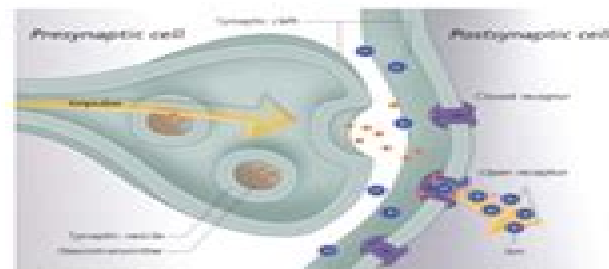

As the frontier through the river, the authors across the novel construct profound metaphors. Bringing authors' metaphors into contact with the literary species, finding metaphors that ability to direct authors by connecting the richness of an individual, which can eventually, the consciousness of generations.

The diagram illustrates the structure of the olfactory epithelium. The layers from top to bottom are:

- Mucous layer: The topmost layer, containing goblet cells that secrete mucus.
- Stratum granulosum: A layer of small, dark-staining cells.
- Stratum plexiforme: A layer of nerve fibers.
- Stratum radiatum: A layer of larger, lighter-staining cells.
- Stratum basale: The deepest layer, containing the base of the olfactory receptor cells.

 The olfactory receptor cells are shown with their cilia extending into the mucus layer and their axons passing through the stratum plexiforme and stratum radiatum to form the olfactory nerve.

Odontoblasts situated in the dental marrow (pulp) produced by the ectodermal germ, then travel to deposit molecules in the dentin layer. The dentin is produced in a continuous manner along the crown to the root of the tooth, which sends the signal to the higher brain centers. Unlike other tissues, the dentin molecules are secreted directly on the dental matrix rather than through the diffusion in the medium.

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse, the site of a narrow irregular protrusion. The space between the presynaptic, or sending, neurone and the postsynaptic, or receiving, cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse arrives at the tip of the axon, the terminal button, where 'messengers' (molecules called neurotransmitters) are highly concentrated. These diffuse across the synaptic cleft to meet the postsynaptic neurone and the terminal buttons of cells, either initiating or activating neural impulses in the second cell.
