“Strangers” in a not-so-strange land: a response to Goddard and Jaeger

Terrance J. Taylor

Georgia State University, Atlanta, Georgia, USA, and

L. Thomas Winfree

New Mexico State University, Las Cruces, New Mexico, USA

Abstract

Purpose – Aims to responds to Goddard and Jaeger (Policing: An International Journal of Police Strategies & Management (PIJPSM), Vol. 28 No. 4) who offered a thorough critique of an article previously published in PIJPSM.

Design/methodology/approach – Welcoming the insights Goddard and Jaeger provide, attempts to address their expressed concerns and elaborate on the rationale behind the various definitions and methods. Additionally, seeks to expand the general discourse about policing in a comparative context.

Findings – Goddard and Jaeger raise concerns about several conceptual and methodological approaches used in the study. While the present authors do not agree with all of Goddard and Jaeger's critique, they do agree on one of the most important points: employing multiple methodologies whenever possible is essential to the advancement of any science.

Originality/value – Provides a response to a thorough critique of an article previously published in PIJPSM.

In an earlier work (Winfree and Taylor, 2004), we utilized survey data to explore differences among certified-peace officers employed by the New Zealand Police (NZP) in diverse New Zealand locales. Human Synergistics, Inc., a subsidiary of Price Waterhouse Urwick, collected the data in 1996 under contract to the NZP. Their survey was part of a large-scale management and line-staff study of the NZP called “Policing 2000” (Winfree and Newbold, 1999). Included in the survey instrument were several large clusters of questions designed to elicit information about all of the surveyed personnel's backgrounds and attitudes, as well as characteristics related to job duties, training, and working environments.

These survey data gave us an opportunity to examine what we felt were intriguing and timely research questions, including the following:

- RQ1.* How different are the personnel working in rural, small-town and metropolitan units in terms of personal-biographical characteristics?
- RQ2.* How do NZP personnel working in rural, small-town, and metropolitan units differ on perceptions of supervisory fairness and support, job satisfaction, and other work-related dimensions?
