

Bringing together young writers in open revolt against bourgeois conventions, social and literary alike, the surrealist movement was influenced by the writings of Freud and Marx. The aim of the surrealists was to release the unconscious from its bondage of platitudes and regulations, to duplicate in literature the elastic time sequences and unexpected juxtapositions of Dream. One of the founders of the surrealist school of writers, Aragon involves his reader in a game of verbal hide-and-seek, keeping him constantly off-balance, disorienting him in order to shock him into a confrontation with his inner self.

By 1930, the surrealist movement had become politicized, and the original band of adherents was decimated. Aragon broke from Breton to become a literary spokesman for French Stalinism. Still active in the French Communist Party, Aragon has published a number of literary works of different genres.

FREDERICK BROWN received his B.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Yale University. A member of the French department at the University of New York, Stony Brook, he has published articles in a number of periodicals, among them The Texas Quarterly, The Southern Review, Harper's Bazaar, and The Hudson Review. He is the author of An Impersonation of Angels, a biography of Jean Cocteau, and is presently writing a biography of André Gide.

THE NEW LIBRARY OF FRENCH CLASSICS

The New Library of French Classics brings to the American reader long neglected yet highly significant works of French literature. Many of these works have never before been translated into English, or exist only in one or two outdated translations. The works included in the series have been chosen for their outstanding literary merit, psychological insight, and valuable social criticism. The translators have been selected both for their proven competence as masters of the French language and for their own talent as writers.

HENRI PEYRE, series editor of the New Library of French Classics, is a Professor Emeritus, Yale University, and Professor at the City University of New York. Generally acknowledged to be the leading French scholar in the United States, Dr. Peyre is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters and the American Philosophical Association. In addition, he is a former president of the Modern Language Association of America.
