

STEPHEN HERO

JAMES JOYCE

Stephen Hero is an early version of Joyce's Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man, probably completed about 1888. It is said that when the manuscript came back to Joyce after rejection by the twentieth publisher to whom it was submitted, he threw it into the fire, from which his wife was able to rescue only a portion of the whole work. Fortunately the surviving pages give us a long, unexcised portion of the original—a sequence complete in itself—which is here presented through the courtesy of the Harvard College Library. It is edited by Thomas Spurgeon.

This text version differs extensively from the published text of the Portrait both in the content and its treatment. It includes many characters and incidents later cut for the sake of compression. Stephen Hero is more an autobiography of Joyce and less an objectified novel. As such it throws valuable new light on the development of his extraordinary genius. And as a human document it is profoundly moving—the record story of a sensitive and brilliant young Irishman's struggle against the oppressive bourgeois and religious conventions of the Dublin of his day. The manuscript begins about a year before Joyce enters the National University and breaks off just as his emancipation from all that the University implies reaches a kind of climax. The love interest, only briefly sketched in the Portrait, is developed at some length in Stephen Hero, and there is also much detailed material about Joyce's family background.
