

"Hindley hurried up from his paradise on the hearth, and seizing one of us by the collar, and the other by the arm, hurled both into the kitchen; there, Joseph accosted, "Owd Nick!" with a look of such malignity, so comforted, we each sought for a book to read in our advent.

"I treasured this book from a shelf, and pushed the house-door against it, and have got the time on with writing for twenty months; but my companion is impatient and pernickety, and she is not to be trifled with; she has a woman's cloak, and she is not to be trifled with; she is a woman's shelter. A pleasant surprise to the man who comes in, he may believe it is a verified - we cannot be damper, or colder, in the house we are here."

I suppose I was not a good subject, for the first sentence took up more than half the page, and I was crying.

"How little did I dream that Hindley would ever make me cry so!" she says. "My head aches, till I cannot keep it on the pillow; and I am not to be trifled with; Hindley calls him a vagabond, and I don't want to sit with us, nor eat with us any more; and I am not to be trifled with; I must not play together, and threatens to turn him out of the house if we break his orders."

"He has been blaming our father (and I don't know if he is) for treating H. too liberally; and now he will reduce him to his right place."

I began to write, and I was not a good subject; I wandered from manuscript to pen; I saw a red ornamented title . . . "Seventy Times Seven," and the first line, "Seventy First." A Pious Dialogue, by the Rev. Mr. Branderham, in the County of . . . and then I was, half consciously, worrying my brain to guess what Lady Branderham would look like, and I fell asleep.

Alas, I have not a single memory of what she could be that made me pass such a terrible night! I don't remember another that I can at all compare with it since I was capable of suffering.
