

THE BEGINNINGS OF TEXAS

1884-1888

I

INTRODUCTION

Texas was for about a century an organized province of Mexico, the affairs were administered by governments appointed by the viceroy of Mexico, and it was in all respects an integral part of Mexico. For this reason the history for more than a hundred years is wrapped up with that of other Mexican affairs; nor does it differ in many respects from the history of its neighbors across the Rio Grande. A history of the north Mexican states must include a history of Texas, and a history of Texas in more detail can not be considered an abridgement of the history of a territory that for a long time formed a part of a larger whole.

The exploration, settlement, and ultimate acquisition of Texas by the Spanish, though hastened by numerous influences, was but the natural result of a northward extension of settlement and civilization. It is true, as this study purports to show, that this expansion was of two kinds and artificial a character to give it an aspect of permanency, but the general purpose that led to the occupancy of the territory afterwards to be named Texas was, in their larger motives, to forestall the motives that led the Spaniards by the slow and steady and unceasing conquests to press ever farther northward in pursuit of their missionary and colonizing schemes. While we shall show the able to make marked resemblances between the special efforts put forth to take possession of Texas and the general plan of the Spaniards to extend their dominion over all the lands to the northward, we shall, on the other hand, find that the position of the land to the north of the Rio Grande made it worth a more immediate acquisition and that there were other motives, apart from those honestly avowed by the Spaniards, that led them at the end of the seventeenth century to begin those movements that were finally to acquire this new district and add it to the list of Mexican provinces.

The real beginnings of Texas, however, are to be found in those
