Rider Haggard, 2020-07-03. Stella Fregelius is a 1904 novel by British writer H. Rider Haggard about a young inventor who falls in love with a mysterious stranger while he is engaged to another woman. As a novelist, Haggard is known primarily for his adventure novels. Summary: As the title suggests, Stella Fregelius is a story of the overlapping fates of three people in a northern coastal region of England. The story follows Morris Monk, an aspiring inventor, as he gets engaged to his first cousin Mary Porson and soon complicates things by falling in love with the daughter of the new church rector, Stella Fregelius. As Morris has prior engagements in this lifetime, he and Stella dedicate their afterlives to one another in a spiritual marriage. Shortly after Stella dies, and Morris spends the next few years trying to contact her spirit before dying of exhaustion. At the beginning of the story, Morris is toiling with his biggest invention, the aerophone. In a form that resembles the earliest phones, Morris designed the aerophone in an attempt to revolutionise the world of communication by allowing two people to speak to each other from miles apart. Morris spent 6 years on it before getting it to work. After its initial success, however, he couldn't repeat the results, so he spends the next two years trying to make the finishing touches. Meanwhile, Morris's father, Colonel Monk, is struggling with the mortgage on the Monksland Estate. As a retired soldier who lost his wife years ago, Colonel Monk hardly even manages to pay the interest on his mortgages. To stabilise the situation, Mr. Porson, Morris's uncle and the Colonel's wealthy brother-in-law, takes over the debt as a creditor. The main conflict of the book arises when the Colonel suggests that Morris should marry a wealthy woman to help ease the financial burden. Morris shows no interest in females, being described as afraid of women. His interest is piqued, however, when his father suggests marrying Mary Porson, Morris's first cousin. While Morris still isn't very enthusiastic about the idea of getting married, he realises how well he and his cousin get along. Seeing as she is very attractive, quite intelligent, and extremely supportive of Morris's endeavours as an inventor, Morris agrees to marry her if the Colonel can prove that she is interested. The next day, Uncle Porson gives the Colonel's plan his full support. It is quickly revealed that Mary has been in love with Morris ever since she was young, and the union appears to be a perfect match. Morris proposes to Mary one night after a dinner party, and the two become engaged. At the dinner party beforehand, however, Mary hears tell of the new church rector's mysteriously beautiful daughter, Stella Fregelius. Immediately before agreeing to her marriage, Mary teases Morris by saying she hopes he doesn't end up being taken possession of by some strange Stella coming out of nowhere. Uncle Porson soon runs into health problems and has a minor stroke. The doctors suggest that Uncle Porson should go stay at his house in France to get away from England's cold and dreary climate, and the Monk and Porson duos leave immediately. Morris finds being away from his experiments in France to be a miserable experience, so Mary tells him to go home early and work on his aerophone until she and the others return for the wedding. Shortly after Morris returns to Monksland, a ship crashes into an infamously dangerous patch of rocks just outside town The sailors from the ship bring Morris an unconscious man from the wreck and as Morris treats him he soon finds out that the sailors deserted this man's daughter on the sinking ship For reasons unknown even to Morris perhaps the draw of Fate as the book so frequently suggests Morris sails out to the wreckage to save the girl

Stella Fregelius H. Haggard, 2018-02 A wide departure in style one of the most interesting books Mr Haggard has ever given us The struggles of the young inventor to perfect the aerophone are only incidental to a story of remarkable psychological force One of the most absorbing narratives that Mr Haggard has ever written Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph The story is full of the charm of expression that made Haggard so popular It is full of human interest throughout There is nothing dull about the story and the whole world of literature will read it with interest and be entertained by it The Worchester Spy It is in fact radically different in scheme and treatment from Mr Haggard's previous stories but for all that it bears the stamp of his genius and will prove fascinating to all readers It is called a tale of three destinies and is at once mystical philosophical and full of human interest There are touches of humor also and altogether the story is worthy of Mr Haggard Rochester Democrat and Chronicle The story is of absorbing interest Like most of this author's novels the style is brilliant easy and clear The narrative will of necessity be followed with breathless interest from beginning to end The plot is well constructed Mr Haggard controls the evolution of the story with the true art that leaves an impression of absolute naturalness New York American To give even the complete outlines of his new story would require many columns for the simple catalog of the varied experiences of the splendidly portrayed characters The story is of absorbing interest Like most of this author's novels the story is easy brilliant and clear Halifax Mail The main idea of this new story by one of the most daring inventors of the modern tale of adventure is a novel one the enlistment of the services of science in the search for a knowledge of the hereafter the employment of an instrument for the transmission of one of the earthly senses in the opening up of communication with the spirit world The invention which serves him in these pages is that of a wireless telephone which is to call back the departed across the chasm Mr Haggard has written a story that is much of a novelty from him and truth to tell it is far more interesting than would be another tale of Jerusalem or South African wonders from his pen New York Mail and Express
