Abstract: Studies have shown that among the factors that influence acquisition of literacy in a second language (L2) is learners' phonemic awareness (Adams, 1990). This study investigated the phonemic awareness strategies used in teaching English language literacy to Grade Three pupils in public primary schools in Embu County Kenya. The study found out that Grade Three teacher showed inadequate knowledge and skills in using phonemic awareness strategies and approaches in teaching phonemic awareness. The study concludes that equipping Grade Three teachers and other lower grades teachers with phonemic awareness strategies is essential in developing alphabetic principle and orthographic mapping which are key facets in reading and writing. This study will equip primary school teachers in the Early Years Education (EYE) tier of the Competence Based Curriculum (CBC) with linguistic approaches and strategies much needed for successful instruction in English language literacy.

1. INTRODUCTION

Phonemic awareness refers to the specific ability to focus on and manipulate individual sounds (phonemes) in spoken words and falls under phonological awareness which is under a broader area of metalinguistic awareness (Chapman, 2003). Phonological skills that are acquired at early stages of a child's life positively influence the development of language literacy at later stages of life. Such skills help learners decode written words thus enhancing fluency in reading and writing. Proponents of phonological awareness have developed a series of activities that help children enhance their phonemic awareness. Hawken et al. (2005) noted that playing with sounds, reading, reciting words or rhythms, sound practice using sounds and using sound for word construction are some of the activities that can be used to help children acquire phonological awareness. According to Ehri, (1995) the development of phonological skills is progressive and begins with basic skills as one move to intricate skills. The orderly manner in which the learning activities should be arranged demands that children would first master segmented syllables, then rhymes before reading initial sounds and then final sounds. Children Phonemic awareness can be taught and measured indirectly through observation and game-like task Yopp (1988).

The 2019 Monitoring Learners Progress (MLP) assessment conducted nationally in Kenya by the Kenya National Examination Council (KNEC) at Grade Three to test the basic acquisition and proficiency in listening and speaking, reading and writing skills revealed that the pupils performed dismally in all the four English language skills with those meeting expectation in each of the four English language skills critical to literacy being rated below 36% (see table 1). This raises concerns on the level of influence phonemic awareness has on acquisition of English language literacy in Embu County and consequently motivates the researchers to conduct this study. This study therefore investigates the phonemic awareness strategies used in teaching English language literacy to Grade Three pupils in public primary schools in Embu county Kenya. The 2019 MLP assessment is shown in table 1:
