

Social Cognition and Prejudice: Stereotyping, Stereotype Activation

- There is now ample evidence that stereotypical trait information about a group can be automatically activated by exposure to a group-related stimulus
- Since most stereotypes of real groups are predominantly negative, the automatic activation of such stereotypes does not suggest that attempts to lessen any pernicious effects of those stereotypes would be very effective
- The activation and schematic operation of stereotypes would matter little if they were unrelated to prejudice
 - And perhaps hence also unrelated to discrimination
- Now we will discuss the possible relationship between the activation of negative stereotypes and prejudice

Stereotypes, Cognition and Culture Perry Roy Hinton, 2000 Focuses on social inference the assumptions we make about others such as their personality status or attitudes using a limited amount of information

Stereotype Activation and Inhibition Robert S. Wyer, Jr., 2013-04-15 The use of social stereotypes as a basis for judgments and behavioral decisions has been a major focus of social psychological theory and research since the field began Although motivational and cognitive influences on stereotyping have been considered these two general types of influence have rarely been conceptually integrated within a common theoretical framework Nevertheless almost every area of theoretical and empirical concern in social cognition areas such as the interpretation of new information memory and retrieval processes impression formation the use of heuristic vs analytic processing strategies the role of affect in information processing and self esteem maintenance has implications for this important social phenomenon This volume s target article brings together the research of Galen Bodenhausen Neil Macrae and others within a theoretical framework that accounts for the processes that underlie both the activation of stereotypes and attempts to suppress their influence They consider several stages of processing including the categorization of a stimulus person the influence of this categorization on the interpretation of information about the stimulus person and the social judgments and behavioral decisions that are ultimately made The stereotype activation and suppression mechanisms that the target article authors consider operate at all of these stages Their conceptualization provides a framework within which the interrelatedness of processing at these stages can be understood The 11th in the series this volume includes companion articles that help to refine and extend the target article s conceptualization and make important theoretical contributions in their own right They are written by prominent researchers in cognitive and social psychology many of whom are active contributors to research and theory on stereotyping They address the following topics the role of power and control in stereotype based information processing the influence of prejudice self regulatory processes social categorization the correction processes that result from perceptions of bias and the conceptualization of stereotypes themselves

Social Cognition Susan T. Fiske, 2025-11-29 The social world is complicated and our minds are limited so we take shortcuts You have to make quick decisions this person is dangerous this one is not The shortcuts we take mostly work well enough because after all we survive But some are deeply unjust including racial or social class categories or other unfair stereotypes This book will help you understand how these shortcuts work why they exist and how they are changing This edition has been thoroughly revised to remove outdated content and add new information on AI and machine learning as well as brand new chapter on accuracy This is not a self help book but it will aid you as you navigate your social world This is not a do good book but it will help you make a difference in the world This is not fiction but it tells some good stories Social cognition captures a remarkable range of phenomena useful to individuals and to the human condition Susan T Fiske is Emerita Eugene Higgins Professor of Psychology and Professor of Public Affairs Princeton University She is the only person to have won all three APS awards Stereotyping and Prejudice Daniel Bar-Tal, Carl F. Graumann, Arie W.

Kruglanski, Wolfgang Stroebe, 2013-11-11 The study of stereotyping and prejudice is a study of human nature group membership and intergroup relationships It sheds light on each of these aspects of social psychology With respect to the first two it has been observed that since groups provide the best framework for satisfying various human needs individuals continuously organize themselves in collectives They belong to a variety of groups many of which they voluntarily select and some to which they are ascribed Group membership therefore is one of the most salient and important of an individual's characteristics The implication of this characteristic is that human beings not only constantly classify other people into group categories either by identifying membership or constructing their own categories but also judge and evaluate them on this basis The stereotypes and prejudice are outcomes of this process They are the beliefs and attitudes toward members of another group In addition the study of stereotyping and prejudice reflects an interest in inter group relationships While we recognize that a discussion of intergroup relationships may focus on behaviors describing actions such as confrontations violence wars cooperation alliance negotiation or coordination we also believe that each of these intergroup behaviors is mediated by perceptions beliefs and attitudes In the case of intergroup behaviors the listed actions are not performed instinctively or mindlessly but are preceded by cognitive processes which among other outputs involve the formation of stereotypes and prejudice toward the other group Stereotype Activation and Inhibition Robert S. Wyer, 1998 The use of social stereotypes as a basis for judgments and behavioral decisions has been a major focus of social psychological theory and research since the field began Although motivational and cognitive influences on stereotyping have been considered these two general types of influence have rarely been conceptually integrated within a common theoretical framework Nevertheless almost every area of theoretical and empirical concern in social cognition areas such as the interpretation of new information memory and retrieval processes impression formation the use of heuristic vs analytic processing strategies the role of affect in information processing and self esteem maintenance has implications for this important social phenomenon This volume's target article brings together the research of Galen Bodenhausen Neil Macrae and others within a theoretical framework that accounts for the processes that underlie both the activation of stereotypes and attempts to suppress their influence They consider several stages of processing including the categorization of a stimulus person the influence of this categorization on the interpretation of information about the stimulus person and the social judgments and behavioral decisions that are ultimately made The stereotype activation and suppression mechanisms that the target article authors consider operate at all of these stages Their conceptualization provides a framework within which the interrelatedness of processing at these stages can be understood The 11th in the series this volume includes companion articles that help to refine and extend the target article's conceptualization and make important theoretical contributions in their own right They are written by prominent researchers in cognitive and social psychology many of whom are active contributors to research and theory on stereotyping They address the following topics the role of power and control in stereotype based information processing the influence of prejudice self regulatory processes social categorization the correction processes that result from perceptions of bias and the conceptualization of stereotypes themselves
