This study focused on determining how learning style preferences have an impact on student success in online courses versus traditional, face-to-face courses. The researchers use three learning style instruments to determine the learning styles of the participants. They used the Student Learning Style Scale, Learning and Study Strategies Inventory, and the Learning Style Inventory. The results of the study showed differences in learning styles of online students versus face-to-face students but did not find any link between their learning style and their success in the course.

The researchers chose to use adult learners to help determine what elements in course design are more valued in blended learning environments (combination of face-to-face and web-based learning). The study provides both online course features and instructional design goals that were selected by these adult learners as most important when they filled out a questionnaire. The results of the study showed that the top ranking online course feature was that it is structured and that guidance and confirmation are offered to the students. Ranked at the very bottom of online course features were communication features. The students also ranked course instructional goals as well and the study found that the highest ranked goal was that the course offer options of individualization or customization.
