

INTRODUCTION

This book is designed to provide notes for students undertaking the Royal Society for the Promotion of Health (RSPH) examination in Poultry Meat Inspection, and as a revision guide for students undertaking other courses in which knowledge of poultry anatomy, diseases and conditions is required such as Veterinary Courses, Environmental Health and Poultry Science.

It is hoped that this may also provide source material for the theoretical training of abattoir staff to undertake post-mortem inspection of poultry in licensed premises under the supervision of the Official Veterinarian as is currently allowed under European law.

Following the success of the first edition of Poultry Inspection, this second edition, updated and augmented was produced. Poultry Inspection was the first book I wrote in the meat inspection series and as such I was unsure what others would require of it, or indeed how much information I should give. Since its publication in 2004 I feel that I have a better idea of what I, and others, expect of the book. To that end I have replaced a large number of the diagrams with labelled photographs and expanded the Anatomy section to give what I hope will be a clearer and better understanding of the subject. The general layout of the book has been further altered to follow the other books in the series including Bovine Meat Inspection, Ovine Meat Inspection and Porcine Meat Inspection due to the positive feedback received.

The Diseases of Poultry section has been updated and now includes photographs of some of the conditions and begins with a basic explanation of the disease process and the body's response. The diseases and conditions are listed in alphabetical order rather than in any order of incidence or priority as these factors can be subject to annual and seasonal variation. The parasites section has been improved by the addition of photographs, most of these kindly supplied by Daniel Parker BVMS Cert PMP MRCVS of the Slate Hall Veterinary Practice, Cambridge.

Having tutored on the subject of poultry inspection and been asked to explain to various students a method for performing post mortems on suspect birds, this has been included as a separate section with explanation and photographs. This section is only intended for guidance, as each person finds their own methods of examination which they are comfortable performing.

I hope that I have recorded all the professionals that provided advice and encouragement in the acknowledgments section, and sincerely hope that this edition fulfils expectations.

AUTHOR DISCLAIMER

I must add that the judgments are my own views. They are based on experience of Poultry Inspection, both broiler and organic/free range systems, and through consultation with others.
