

Normative Influence

In normative social influence, people conform to the group norm to fit in, to feel good, and to be accepted by the group.

THEORY

Deutsch and Gerard's (1955) theory of normative social influence posits that people conform to group norms to seek social approval and acceptance and avoid rejection or conflict.

This concept, known as normative influence, is driven by the human need for affiliation and acceptance in social groups.

EXAMPLES

1. Dressing in a certain way to fit in with your peer group.
2. Laughing at a joke you don't find funny because everyone else is laughing.
3. Abstaining from expressing unpopular opinions in a group discussion.
4. Teenagers engaging in risky behavior due to peer pressure.
