

ADOLESCENCE

I am so much a child that without end
I play at games and childishly believe
My own pretendings—ever fill my days
With changing faiths and loves and strange young griefs

That I invent—and though I quickly tire
Of each toy passion, still, with eagerness
As keen, I turn to the next game, and cry
“At length I love!” or “This time I believe!”
—And yet I know (sometimes) that I have found
No God who was not tenuous as smoke
Of fragrant, futile incense—never love
Of which I could say, certainly: “The years
Will not touch this”—nor any grief a month
Would not suffice to mend. And to my youth
The thought is terrible that age or death
May find me still absorbed in child’s pretence—
Stretching vain hands to touch reality.
