Controls on Carbonate Platform and Reef Development Jeff Lukasik, Juan Antonio Simo, 2008 Carbonate platforms and reefs emerge grow and die in response to intrinsic and extrinsic mechanisms forced primarily by tectonics oceanography climate ecology and eustasy These mechanisms or controls create the physical biological and chemical signals accountable for the myriad of carbonate depositional responses that together form the complex depositional systems present in the modern and ancient settings If we are to fully comprehend these systems it is critical to ascertain which controls ultimately govern the life cycle of carbonate platforms and reefs and understand how these signals are recorded and preserved Deciphering which signals produce a dominant sedimentological response from the plethora of physical and biological information generated from superimposed regional to global scale controls is critical to achieving this goal With this understanding it may be possible to extract common time and space independent depositional responses to specific mechanisms that may ultimately be used in a productive sense Extensive research on a wide variety of carbonate platform and reefal systems in the past few decades has provided the foundation and understanding necessary to take carbonate research to a new level With assistance from rapidly advancing computer software and an increasing use of cross disciplinary integration carbonate research is shifting from description and morphological analysis towards a science that is more focused on the assessment of process and genetic relationships The aim of this special publication is to present a cross section of recent research that shows this evolution from a variety of perspectives and scales using examples distributed throughout the Phanerozoic
