

1. In 1-2 sentences, describe the impact of the sociocultural context on America Ferrera's middle childhood development, particularly in terms of concepts such as cultural identity, emotional development, and social development.

- The impact of the sociocultural context on America Ferrera's middle childhood development is huge specifically in terms of the concept of cultural identity. She was told that she did not sound Hispanic enough even though she is Hispanic due to the stereotypes people have about what a Hispanic individual is supposed to sound like, these stereotypes about an individual's cultural identity can have a huge impact on there middle childhood development

2. Pick at least 2 of America Ferrera's examples or experiences and use them to compare collective vs self-efficacy. Consider concepts such as vicarious learning, self-belief, goal-setting, etc.

- Ferrera shows self-efficacy when dealing with those who told her that she will never accomplish anything during her audition. Ferrera shows collective efficacy when she tells us how representation is important to her. She tells us that she did not have representation growing up and how she wants to be the representation for other little girls now.

3. Then, in 2-3 sentences, describe how these examples or experiences demonstrate the intersection between collective efficacy and social change.

- These examples demonstrate the intersection between collective efficacy and social change in that it shows you how her being nominated for an Emmy as a Latina actress gave her confidence and helped her to become the representation that other latina women needed. This was necessary because this is something that barely happens and didn't happen for years at a time but it was needed to show the younger population that they can do whatever they put their mind to no matter what others might say about it.

4. Finally, compare them to your own experiences with making social change; how can collective and self-efficacy help you understand your own attempts at making change, or how can you use them to take action in the future?

- After learning about collective and self-efficacy I have come to understand that they are both important when talking about making a social change. They show me just how important it is for a social worker to advocate for what you believe in and for the people of the community that you are helping collectively. Both of these are important if you really want to make a social change in your community.
