Experience and History David Carr, 2014-07-01 David Carr outlines a distinctively phenomenological approach to history Rather than asking what history is or how we know history a phenomenology of history inquires into history as a phenomenon and into the experience of the historical How does history present itself to us how does it enter our lives and what are the forms of experience in which it does so History is usually associated with social existence and its past and so Carr probes the experience of the social world and of its temporality Experience in this context connotes not just observation but also involvement and interaction We experience history not just in the social world around us but also in our own engagement with it For several decades philosophers' reflections on history have been dominated by two themes representation and memory Each is conceived as a relation to the past representation can be of the past and memory is by its nature of the past On both of these accounts history is separated by a gap from what it seeks to find or wants to know and its activity is seen by philosophers as that of bridging this gap This constitutes the problem to which the philosophy of history addresses itself how does history bridge the gap which separates it from its object the past It is against this background that a phenomenological approach based on the concept of experience can be proposed as a means of solving this problem or at least addressing it in a way that takes us beyond the notion of a gap between present and past World History Eric

Vanhaute,2013-07-24 World History An Introduction provides readers with the knowledge and tools necessary to understand the global historical perspective and how it can be used to shed light on both our past and our present A concise and original guide to the concepts methods debates and contents of world history it combines a thematic approach with a clear and ambitious focus Each chapter traces connections with the past and the present to explore major questions in world history How did humans evolve from an endangered species to the most successful of them all How has nature shaped human history How did agricultural societies push human history in a new direction How has humankind organized itself in ever more complex administrative systems How have we developed new religious and cultural patterns How have the paths of The West and The Rest diverged over the last five centuries How at the same time has the world become more interconnected and globalized How is this world characterized by growing gaps in wealth poverty and inequality Sharp and accessible Eric Vanhaute s introduction to this exciting field demonstrates that world history is more of a perspective than a single all encompassing narrative an instructive new way of seeing thinking and doing It is an essential resource for students of history in a global context
