Throughout the management literature as elegantly trumpeted by management consultants and gurus there seems to be a common message for a firm to be competitive it must produce quality goods or services. This means that firms to remain competitive must at the same time produce at the least cost possible to be price competitive and deliver high quality products and services. As a result quality has become a strategic overnight involving all both in and out of the firm in the management of its interfaces with clients and the environment. To give quality suppliers, buyers, operations and marketing managers as well as corporate management must become aware of the mutual relationships and interdependencies to which they are subjected so that they will be able to function as a coherent whole. This involves human relations and people problems, organizational design issues, engineering design options, monitoring and control approaches and most of all a managerial philosophy that can integrate and control the multiple elements which render the firm a viable quality producing and profitable whole. To realize the benefits of quality it is imperative that we design products to be compatible with market needs, market structure, competition and of course that we are constantly aware and abreast of consumers' tastes and the manufacturing technologies that are continuously emerging.
