General, United States Army
Chief of Staff

United States soldiers take pleasure in the fact that the Army is not only the oldest of the American military Services, but also the only one which can claim a record of continuous active existence from its inception, in June 1775, to the present day. The Army's pride, however, is not primarily based upon the length of its march, but upon the quality of the service rendered.

"The essence of the Army—in fundamental character—arises from its tradition of dedicated service to the Nation. This character has been manifest in the gallantry, steadfastness, and sacrifice of the Army in battle. It has been manifest, also, in times of peace. The Army, ahead of the tide of American settlement, explored and uncovered the unknown regions beyond the frontiers of habitation, and first provided the stability of law and so order as these regions began to be settled. And it has been the Army which, having won its victories, has then turned to the task of restoring the economic, social, and administrative life of frontier countries.

"In short, the Army takes pride in the knowledge that, in peace and in war, it has served the Nation well. The Army draws strength from its determination to continue to serve in the same manner.

"The reader of this volume will become acquainted with the colorful story of our Army uniforms. To every American soldier, his uniform is a symbol of the tradition of the past, of determination for the future. It is a reminder of the noble heritage which has been handed on by those who wore the uniform before us—a heritage of integrity and honor, of courage and steadfastness, of selfless devotion to Country. These characteristics have always formed the backbone of the American soldier, a backbone whose indelible imprint is carried by our Army men and women wherever they move throughout the world."
