

Parizhskaya Kommuna 1938

The first Russian dreadnoughts were designed using experience of the Russian-Japanese war that predetermined a number of unusual features of the ships of this class. The basic requirement was brought together to providing of the maximum protection against HE shells therefore the armor covered all freeboard, but its thickness appeared less, than on battleships of other countries. Main gun arrangement became the second characteristic line of Russian dreadnoughts: in four triple turrets at regular intervals distributed on the ship length: such arrangement in Russian Naval Staff considered optimal for squadron battle. The design assignment was formulated by the end of 1907 then the international competition was declared. The design of the Baltic Works became the winner, and under it in 1909 4 ships were laid down: Sevastopol and Petrovskiy on Baltic Works, Gangut and Poltava on New Admiralty.

Battleships of Sevastopol class had flush-decked low-freeboard hull with an icebreaking stem and a minimum of superstructures. 5.1m-high main belt covered all the hull length. Amidships (between end barbettes) its thickness was 225 mm, at ship ends 125mm, and abreast an aft bulkhead 100mm. The upper belt above had thickness of 125mm amidships and 75mm in a bow; only upper part of the side aft of aft barbette was unprotected. The main belt was closed with 100-125mm transverse bulkheads. Armor decks were three: 38mm upper, connected to an upper edge of the main belt, 25mm medium and 12mm main/low with 50mm slopes. Turrets had 203mm faces and sides, 350mm rears and 76mm roofs. Machinery consisted of 10 Parson turbines, arranged in three engine rooms, and working on 4 shafts. At 32000hp ships should make 21.75kts, and when forced at 42000hp 23kts.

Building of the ships was slow, and they were completed already after the First World War beginning in which practically did not participate. Gangut and Poltava in March 1918 were stricken from the fleet list and were put on long-term storage. Gangut was returned to the fleet in 1925. Poltava (renamed Frucht 7.1.1926) suffered a fire in 1919, the ship was never repaired and scrapped in 1941. Parizhskaya Kommuna in 1929 was transferred to Black Sea.

In 1928-1938 all three survived battleships passed modernizations, receiving larger superstructures with fore funnel gracefully curved aft, and superstructure for the bow for seaworthiness improvement. Thus, the type and the form of a foremast and superstructures of all ships in this or that slightly differed. Also, turbines were completely replaced by the new ones intended for Izmail class battlecruisers, and new oil-burning boilers were installed. These measures allowed to keep speed at former level, despite the increased displacement. On trials Marat showed 23.8kts; Oktyabrskaya Revolyutsiya 22.87kts. Parizhskaya Kommuna received

Soviet Union Volume 7:

Adopting the Track of Expression: An Mental Symphony within Soviet Union Volume 7

In a global used by monitors and the ceaseless chatter of instant conversation, the melodic elegance and mental symphony produced by the prepared term often disappear into the background, eclipsed by the relentless sound and interruptions that permeate our lives. But, nestled within the pages of Soviet Union Volume 7 an enchanting literary treasure filled with organic feelings, lies an immersive symphony waiting to be embraced. Constructed by an outstanding composer of language, this charming masterpiece conducts readers on a psychological trip, skillfully unraveling the hidden songs and profound impact resonating within each cautiously constructed phrase. Within the depths of the moving examination, we can explore the book is central harmonies, analyze their enthralling writing design, and submit ourselves to the profound resonance that echoes in the depths of readers souls.
