

Trinh Minh-ha's attempt in Shoot for the Contents to induce a change of consciousness in her audience via experiments in filmic form does not meet with total success because she attends more to how something is said than to what is said. This emphasis culminates in the perpetuation, rather than the contestation, of contemporary Western conventional wisdom about China. It would be fallacious, however, to conclude that stability of meaning and the perpetuation of stereotypes are the sole products of Shoot for the Contents. This film is a dense and intricate work that demands active viewer participation in order to make sense of it. The film both assumes and purposively withholds information in order to deny the pleasures and complacency of cinematic suture. The viewer must consult alternative sources when seeking answers to questions and issues raised in the film. In doing so, ideally, the viewer will arrive at an understanding that is simultaneously more nuanced and self-conscious than that which would have resulted from a more self-contained film. In spite of Shoot for the Contents elitist propensities, this quality constitutes the primary strength of the film.

A Space on the Side of the Road
Kathleen Stewart
Princeton: University of Princeton Press, 1996
243 pages + xii, 36 photographs.

JOHN BODINGER DE URIARTE
THE UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS AT AUSTIN

The use of photographs within the bodies of textual ethnographies has a mixed history of failures, near-misses, and rare successes. Much depends on the balance between image and text, on the motivation for including photographs within the ethnographic text, and on the use of photography as an element of ethnographic practice. While Kathleen Stewart's book A Space on the Side of the Road incorporates photographs in a deeply engaging manner, the work is in majority a textual ethnography. Before beginning a discussion of the images, it will be useful to sketch a discussion of the ethnographic text.

One major danger of ethnographic practice may be the attempt, both in the field and while writing-up, to fit one's observations into a pre-figured ontology and epistemology; a way of 'doing' ethnography as its own fixed practice, a practice able to shift locales and objects while retaining a thrust both cohesive and ultimately static. Stewart appeals to a dramatic move away from this type of business as usual. Her book attempts a "new ethnography," an ethnography that takes "a cue from the tactile, imaginary, nervous and contested modes of critique of the subjects we study not in order to decide what these interpretive modes 'mean' in the end but to begin to deploy them in a cultural politics." This is a dangerous and shifting ground, a ground that depends on keeping the dynamic gap open between signs and what is read from signs. Invoking the space on the side of the road calls forward not simply a marginalized and resistant space, but also a deeply creative, productive, and unfixed one. It is a space with what Ross Chambers calls room to maneuver; a richly textured space of imagining that resists the traditional ethnographic effort of getting the "gist" of things.

It is difficult to begin a review of such a book. Integral to the book's form is a resistance to such attempts at encapsulation. It begins as an ethnography of Appalachia. Soon, however, the book starts to weave back on itself, shifting both language and objects of analysis, from the beginning establishing a dialogue both with itself and with the reader. A lyrical evocation of speech, stories, memories and fragments, Stewart's book is a richly-layered poetic exploration of Appalachia, of the role of talk in Appalachia, of ethnography, and of the ways in which we make sense of texts themselves.

There are a number of formal conceits that Stewart uses to keep the gap between signs and what is read from signs open and dynamic. The text slips between a language of analysis and the language of her informants, using speech patterns and cadences that cross over, repeated words with dropped ending 'g's, and the reappearance of such words dressed-down, outside of scare quotes, bold type, or italics, and re-introduced through the text as reasonable and logical ways of

Hadromi-Allouche, Michael Hubbard MacKay, 2023-03-20 Betwixt and Between Liminality and Marginality Mind the Gap offers an interdisciplinary thinking on the marginal within society Using the framework of Victor Turner's earlier notions of liminality the book both challenges Turner's symbolic anthropology and celebrates its continued influence across disciplines and under new theoretical constraints Liminality in its simplest forms provides language for meaningful approaches to articulate transition and change It also represents complex social theories beyond Turner's classical symbolic approach While demonstrating the enduring relevance of Turner's language for expressing transition this volume keeps an eye toward the validity of critiques against him It thus theorizes with Turner's work while updating even abandoning some of his primary ideas when applying it to contemporary social issues A central focus of this volume is marginality Turner recognized that marginals like liminars are betwixt and between however they lack assurance that their ambiguity will be resolved This volume explores the dialogic relationship of space and agency to recognize marginal groups and people and inquire without a harmonious resolution what happens to the marginals Have race class gender and sexual orientation become the space for thinking about reintegration and communitas Each chapter examines how marginal groups or liminal spaces and ideas destabilize shape and affect the dominant culture

Torch Singing Stacy Holman Jones,2007-07-08 In this innovative book Stacy Holman Jones presents torch singing as a much more complicated phenomenon than the familiar trope of a woman lamenting her victimhood With an ethnographer's eye she observes the bluesy torch singers asking if they are possibly performing critiques of the very lyrics they sing From this perspective we see the singer giving expression not only to desire but also to an incipient determination to resist and change Holman Jones also reveals points of contact in the opposition between spectators and performers emotion and intellect and love and power Instead of interpreting the expression of love as a woman's violent mistake as willing deception and passive fate Holman Jones allows us to hear an active search for hope
