

Stargazing

SPACE EXPLORATION is the greatest scientific adventure of all. In the 1950s, after centuries of stargazing, scientists took a leap into the sky. They sent the first satellite into orbit. Soon, space probes and human flights were revealing more and more about the Moon, planets and stars.

1 Galileo's discoveries

In 1609, Italian astronomer Galileo pointed his telescope at the night sky. He discovered that the Moon's surface was covered with craters and mountains and was the first to see clearly the separate stars of the Milky Way.

2 Dione by mirrors

Galileo's telescope used lenses. But a century later, Newton designed an optical telescope in which light rays enter through a lens at the front and are reflected back out through a lens at the rear.

3 On a stand

The telescope's view from mirrors is better than from lenses. But it's still not a perfect view. To get a better view, astronomers use a telescope that's mounted on a stand that can move in any direction.

4 Dished up

Before it is built, these huge dishes are often made of metal. But when they're built, they're made of glass. The light that enters the dish is reflected off the back of the dish and then out through a hole in the front. They can detect very faint stars and planets, such as the ones that would be far away from the Earth.

5 The Hubble Space Telescope

This telescope orbits the Earth. Because it's above the Earth's atmosphere, it's not affected by the Earth's atmosphere. It's more useful than ground-based telescopes.

Retailising Space Prof Dr Mattias Kärrholm, 2013-06-28 Over the past few years there has been a proliferation of new kinds of retail space Retail space has cropped up just about everywhere in the urban landscape in libraries workplaces churches and museums In short retail is becoming a more and more manifest part of the public domain The traditional spaces of retail such as city centres and outlying shopping malls are either increasing in size or disappearing producing new urban types and whole environments totally dedicated to retail The creation of these new retail spaces has brought about a re and de territorialisation of urban public space and has also led to transformations in urban design and type of materials used and even in the logic and ways through which these design amenities meet the needs of retailers and or consumers This book describes how the retailisation of public domains affects our everyday life and our use of the built environment Taking an architectural and territorial perspective on this issue it looks specifically at how retail and consumption spaces have changed and territorialised urban life in different ways It then develops a methodology and a set of concepts to describe and understand the role of architecture in these territorial transformations
