Gardens in Northern Iberia in the Early Middle Ages Wendy Davies,2024-11-21 Using archaeological archaeobotanical and written evidence this book explores what gardens meant in northern Spain and northern Portugal in the early middle ages a question asked here for the first time Dealing with a vast area of the Iberian peninsula that lay beyond Muslim al Andalus with great geographical diversity and wide variation in climate this books spans the sixth to tenth centuries showing that gardens might lie beside houses or scattered among arable fields or grouped together in garden zones Gardens are difficult to recognize archaeologically but excavation suggests that many were terraces as it also suggests that indicators of intensive use through fertilization or irrigation or characteristic weed species may be more useful for identifying garden activity than looking for a distinctive shape The strongest indications of garden produce are that fruit was always important and so were legumes and some gardens especially those owned by monasteries may have grown herbs The most striking trend across the tenth century is that peasants sold gardens to monasteries although there are regional differences Catalonia having a more diverse land market Peasants sold in order to get food and monasteries bought partly to provide garden produce including herbs for expanding communities but partly to use and increase garden space for textile plants flax hemp and dye plants for commercial reasons especially urban supply Gardens were vital for the supply of clothes By scrutinising the logistics of small and medium scale ownership the relations of owners with large scale land holders especially institutions and the ins and outs of those economic and social interactions this wide ranging book adds a new dimension to the environmental history of western Europe in addition to contributing to an understanding of the social economic and cultural history of the period more generally The Archaeology of Household Activities Penelope Allison, 2013-05-13 This pioneering collection engages with recent research in different areas of the archaeological discipline to bring together case studies of the household material culture from later prehistoric and classical periods The book provides a comprehensive and accessible study for students into the material records of past households aiding wider understanding of our own domestic development
