

Student Perceptions Concerning their Experience in a Flipped Undergraduate Capstone Course

OP McCubbins¹, Thomas H. Paulsen², and Ryan G. Anderson³

Abstract

Flipped learning is an innovative approach to teaching at the post-secondary level. Traditional methods of initial delivery of curricular content occur before a face-to-face class session. Students must prepare before attending class, as the majority of face-to-face class sessions are utilized for applying curricular content to complex problems. A specific application of flipped learning, Team-Based Learning holds students accountable for the pre-class preparation via an individual test, as well as to their peers via a team test. Students engage and discuss curricular content on the team test as well as application exercises, which are rigorously designed activities aimed at increasing cognitive skills of the students. This study sought to determine student's perceptions of a recently adopted, atypical teaching approach, known as Team-Based Learning in the Iowa State University capstone farm management course (AgEdS 450). Post-course quantitative and qualitative data were collected. Overall student perceptions were positive and supported the adoption of a student-centered course design. It is recommended that dedicated training workshops be developed for faculty members within Colleges of Agriculture that focus on student-centered instruction. Further examination of Team-Based Learning in other courses within Colleges of Agriculture, and Agricultural Education courses specifically, is recommended.

Keywords: team-based learning; flipped learning; active learning; capstone course

Introduction

In today's rapidly changing world, students must possess "requisite skills for lasting success" (Rateau, Kaufman, & Cletzer, 2015, p. 52) as they enter the workforce. Such skills garnering attention within the literature include: communication skills, working in teams, problem-solving abilities, and critical thinking skills (Casner-Lotto, Barrington, & Wright, 2006; Crunkilton, Cepica, & Fluker, 1997; Currey, Oldland, Considine, Glanville, & Story, 2015; Espey, 2010; Hazel, Heberle, McEwen, & Adams, 2013; Perry, Paulsen, & Retallick, 2015; Perry, Retallick & Paulsen, 2014). Active learning has been documented as having a positive effect on the aforementioned skills (Currey et al., 2015; Duron, Limbach, & Waugh, 2006; Popil, 2011; Prince, 2004; Tsui, 2002; Yang, 2012; Youngblood & Beitz, 2001).

Flipped instruction is one example of an active learning technique that can be employed in a variety of learning environments (Prince, 2004; Rochl, Reddy, & Shannon, 2013) and has been adopted in many courses throughout higher education (Barkley, 2015; Gilboy, Heinerichs, & Pazzaglia, 2015; Horn, 2013). In a flipped learning environment, traditional content delivery methods (lectures, presentations, and readings) are flipped to occur prior to the face-to-face setting, allowing additional time to be devoted to applying course concepts towards difficult problems
