Gilly Carr, 2014-02-19 This book explores the way in which the legacy of the German occupation of the Channel Islands has been turned into heritage or conversely neglected over the last 70 years Once seen as the taint of the mark of the beast the perception of much of what the Germans left behind has slowly changed from being despised and reviled buried underground or dumped at sea to being reclaimed restored highly valued and treated as heritage This book examines the journey of various aspects of this heritage exploring the role of each post war generation in picking at the scar of occupation refusing to let it heal or fade By discovering and interpreting anew their once hated legacy each generation of Channel Islanders has changed the resulting collective memory of a period which is rapidly moving to the edge of living memory It includes the first in depth investigation into the multiple aspects of heritage of occupation of a single place and will offer comparative material for other heritage professionals who work with similar material throughout Europe and in other post occupation areas It will explore the complex ethical issues faced by anyone who works with the legacy or heritage of Nazism seeking to understand how and why the Channel Islands have responded in the way that they have and asking how unique or typical for formerly occupied Europe their response has been      The Archaeology of the Channel Islands Jacquetta Hawkes, 1938      The coast of the Cotentin peninsula of Normandy in France and some 120km from mainland Britain Strategically placed in the western channel yet subject to very large tidal ranges and dangerous currents the islands have been occupied for over 250 000 years As a result they are rich in archaeological and historical sites and monuments Many excavations have taken place over the last 20 years the results of which have contributed to new evidence particularly in relation to the Mesolithic Roman and medieval periods This book describes the archaeological record of the Channel Islands from their early prehistory to the medieval period Heather Sebire has lived in Guernsey since 1978 After graduating from London University she worked in archaeology in London and Wessex before moving to Guernsey She was secretary of La Societe Guernesiasie Archaeology Group for many years and participated in much of the rescue archaeology that took place on the island Since 1995 she has held the post of Archaeology Officer at Guernsey Museum and has written and broadcast about the archaeology of Guernsey and the other islands since that time
