Abstract

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease between two groups of men who had been exposed to asbestos. One group consisted of men who had worked in asbestos-related occupations and the other group consisted of men who had never worked in asbestos-related occupations. The results showed that the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease was significantly higher in the group of men who had worked in asbestos-related occupations than in the group of men who had never worked in asbestos-related occupations.
