

In nearly five years of operation, we've never called out a pet store on this page. Today we saw something so upsetting that we refuse to be quiet about it.

We stopped by the Petco on E Franklin Street in Chapel Hill to pick up some cat food. Before moving out of Chapel Hill two years ago, we had many great experiences with this store and were very impressed by their staff. So we were shocked to see a leopard gecko in this condition on display tonight.

I spoke to one employee who was very nice and acknowledged that the animal wasn't well. They called up the manager, who was extremely rude and dismissive of this animal's condition. While they did indicate that a vet appointment had been scheduled, they refused to take the animal off display or address how dangerous it is to house this animal with other leopard geckos. Unless this gecko has been neglected, then it is extremely suspicious for cryptosporidium – which is contagious and often deadly. This means every gecko that's been housed with this one is highly at risk. We get calls every week from individuals who want to surrender an animal they bought from a chain store because it's tested positive for crypto or Atadenovirus – this is why that happens. And depressingly, it's usually the callers first reptile or one they purchased to be a family pet.

When I told the manager that this was the worst pet store animal I'd seen, he told me "Well, I've seen worse." He blamed their suppliers and said it's frustrating when they send them animals this sick. So, why are they using the same supplier? Because that's what chain stores do. They make money by buying animals from mass resellers and it's a crapshoot whether the animal will be healthy or on death's door.

So if you needed that extra motivation to stop giving chain pet stores your money in 2023, here it is. I walked out without my cat food and will find another source. And if you want to call this Petco or corporate and tell them just how unacceptable this is, go right ahead. Based on my conversation with the manager, they see zero issue with displaying a dying animal for sale.
