Social Representations and the Development of Knowledge Gerard Duveen, Barbara Bloom Lloyd, 1990-03-30 This book raises for the first time developmental issues in relation to the theory of social representations which Duveen and Lloyd introduced to account for the influence of social life on psychological processes He describes a society's values ideas beliefs and practices as social representations which function both as rule systems structuring social life and as codes facilitating communication The editors introduction identifies the need to expand the theory of social representations to consider developmental changes in social beliefs in individual understanding and in the process of communication Individual chapters examine aspects of such processes in the domains of nursery school life of gender of social divisions in society of images of childhood of emotion of intelligence and of psychology In the final chapter Moscovici considers the contribution which these developmental perspectives make to the theory The book will interest specialists and students in the human and social sciences including developmental and social psychology sociology and communication studies

The Social Development of the Intellect Willem Doise, Gabriel Mugny, 1984 The definition of intelligence has become the object of many controversies particularly about its nature and the causes of its development with essential social implications at stake To get out of this deadlock the authors of this book propose a social conception of intelligence and of its development they consider intelligence as resulting from the inter individual coordinations of actions and judgements They experimentally study how groups of children elaborate new cognitive tools which their members taken individually did not possess at the start and how these cognitive tools are subsequently used by the child alone
