Student Achievement And The Changing American Family:

Student Achievement and the Changing American Family David Waltz Grissmer, Sheila Nataraj Kirby, Mark Berends, Stephanie Williamson, 1994 There is a considerable debate about the direction and causes of change in U S student performance over the last 25 years This study 1 estimates the net effect of changing family characteristics and demographics on aptitude scores and 2 compares the expected changes to actual changes to estimate the effects of factors unrelated to family The conclusions undercut the conventional wisdom about failing schools deteriorating families and ineffective public investments and policies The study estimates that changing family characteristics would boost scores by about 7 percentile points These gains come primarily from higher parental education and smaller family size which translates into more resources per child For non Hispanic white students the actual gains in scores were approximately the same as expected from family changes However black and Hispanic students made far larger gains than non Hispanic white students and only about one third of the gains could be explained by changing family characteristics These large unexplained gains for minority students may be evidence that additional public investment in schools and social programs and equal educational opportunity policies have had marked benefits The authors caution that the results should not be interpreted to mean that conditions have improved for every student family or school only that averaging across all 14 18 year old students over the last 20 years indicates a positive change

Improving Student Achievement David W. Grissmer, Ann Flanagan, Jennifer H. Kawata, Stephanie Williamson, Tom LaTourrette, 2000-07-19 Why do students have different achievement levels across states Is math achievement improving across states Differences in average achievement levels across states are mainly traceable to differing family characteristics However students from similar families also score differently across states These differences are related to differences in resource levels and in how resources are spent States with high spending per pupil lower pupil teacher ratios higher participation in public prekindergarten and higher reported teacher resources have higher achievement

Disadvantaged children are the most sensitive to low resource and additional resources could substantially their scores Between state rather than within state differences in resources appear to be the main reason for inequitable resource levels for students of lower socioeconomic status The conclusion is that significant math gains are occurring across most states that cannot be traced to resource changes that the rate of gain varies significantly by state and that reform efforts are the likely cause of these gains The results certainly challenge the traditional view of public education as unreformable African American Family Life Vonnie C. Earning and Learning Susan E. Mayer, Paul E. Peterson, 2010-12-01 A Brookings Institution Press and Russell Sage Foundation publication Education is one of the largest sectors of the U S economy yet scholars educators policymakers and parents do not agree about what the money spent on education really buys In particular they do not agree on how much education improves children s ability to learn or whether the things children learn in school truly improve their chances for success as adults If schooling increases how much students know and what they know does pay off later then it is important to ask what schools can do to increase students learning and earning The essays in this book report estimates of the effects of learning on earnings and other life outcomes They also examine whether particular aspects of schooling such as the age at which children begin school classroom size and curriculum or structural reform such as national or statewide examinations or school choice affect learning Taken together their findings suggest that liberals are correct in saying that more investment is needed in early education that class sizes should be further reduced and that challenging national or state standards should be established But they also provide support for conservatives who ask for a more demanding curriculum and greater school choice Contributors include John
