

The Architects of the Parthenon

It is difficult to look at a building as famous as the Parthenon without preconceived ideas. But in this radical re-examination Professor Rhys Carpenter questions statements and challenges assumptions which have been accepted for centuries. So far from being a miracle of precision and calculation, the Parthenon is shown by him to have been a re-building of a partially completed temple: a considerable element of improvisation and makeshift entered into its creation. And Professor Carpenter suggests that the two architects, Kallikrates and Iktinos, were not collaborators but rivals, patronized by opposing political factions. His investigations stretch beyond the building itself, leading him into a general discussion of Greek temples in their historical context.

The Architect and Society

The aim of this series, specially written for Penguin Books, is to present the great architects of the world in their social and cultural environments.

Developments in Structural Form Rowland Mainstone, 2013-04-03 In the critically acclaimed first edition of this book Mainstone offered a brilliant and highly original account of the structural developments that have made possible the achievements of architects and bridge builders throughout history In this extensively revised and expanded new edition now available in paperback new insights and a full coverage of recent developments in both design and construction are incorporated The book identifies features that distinguish the forms built by man from those shaped by nature and discusses the physical and other constraints on the choices that can be made It then looks in turn at all the elementary forms arches domes beams slabs and the like which combine into the more complex forms of complete structures and at the different classes of the complete forms themselves The development of each form is traced chronologically but with an emphasis less on the chronology than on the problems that designers have continually faced in trying to serve new ends with limited means or to serve old ones in new ways The book concludes with a chapter on the processes of design showing how the designer s freedom of choice has been widened by a growing understanding of structural behaviour

Architecture Barnabas Calder, 2021-07-01 A groundbreaking history of architecture told through the relationship between buildings and energy The story of architecture is the story of humanity The buildings we live in from the humblest pre historic huts to today s skyscrapers reveal our priorities and ambitions our family structures and power structures And to an extent that hasn t been explored until now architecture has been shaped in every era by our access to energy from fire to farming to fossil fuels In this ground breaking history of world architecture Barnabas Calder takes us on a dazzling tour of some of the most astonishing buildings of the past fifteen thousand years from Uruk via Ancient Rome and Victorian Liverpool to China s booming megacities He reveals how every building from the Parthenon to the Great Mosque of Damascus to a typical Georgian house was influenced by the energy available to its architects and why this matters Today architecture consumes so much energy that 40% of the world s greenhouse gas emissions come from the construction and running of buildings If we are to avoid catastrophic climate change then now more than ever we need beautiful but also intelligent buildings and to retrofit not demolish those that remain Both a celebration of human ingenuity and a passionate call for greater sustainability this is a history of architecture for our times The New International Encyclopaedia ,1929
