

Landrum-Griffin Act (1959)

Designed to protect union members and their participation in union affairs, allows the government to regulate union activities:

- Each union has a bill of rights to ensure minimum standards of internal union democracy
- Each union must give their constitution to Department of Labor
- Each union must report its financial activities and financial interests of leaders to Department of Labor
- Union elections are regulated by government
- Union leaders have fiduciary responsibility to use union money and property for the membership, not for own personal gain
