Matthews, 1969 The Language of Morals Richard Mervyn Hare, 1952 I have set out in this book to write a clear brief and readable introduction to ethics which shall bring the beginner as directly as possible to grips with the fundamental problems of the subject I have therefore in reducing the material which I had prepared to about half its original length left out most of those qualifications answers to minor objections and other defences with which the security minded philosopher is apt to hedge himself round Almost every paragraph in this book as in other works of philosophy requires some qualification but to supply it on every occasion would be to make my main contentions difficult to grasp I have therefore tried to adopt throughout as definite a standpoint as possible in the belief that it is more important that there should be discussion of the points herein raised than that I should survive it unscathed Preface
