I Am a Hero, I Am a Survivor Roxane Christ,2004-10 There are three factors in this book which should be taken into consideration by the reader Firstly not all Jews are equal the rich ones had the opportunity to survive because they chose to use their wealth to save their lives Secondly Jews are not equal inasmuch as whether they are issued from different backgrounds solidarity is not found amongst them And finally when it comes to avenge their suffering they will do it with only accepting and resenting the pain of their vengeful acts throughout the last episodes of the Second World War What is also evident however is that there are no animosity no remorse no wanting of rewards for heroism on the part of Lou Van Coevorden He is now one of the last survivors of the concentration camps in Germany and when he saw the downfall of Auschwitz his glee couldn't be contained but neither could it be expressed Lou Van Coevorden was spent yet at the age of twenty one he was to fight for his life many times over even though the Second World War had ended After living in hell he couldn't return to life he needed to deny himself the vision of the faces that haunted him at every turn the faces of those who had not been able to survive

Cities into Battlefields Stefan Goebel,Derek Keene,2017-03-02 Cities have always had a key role in warfare as strategic centres which periodically suffered the horrors of siege and sack With industrialisation however they were drawn ever closer to the front line and to direct and continuous experience of fighting and destruction Cities into Battlefields Metropolitan Scenarios Experiences and Commemorations of Total War explores the cultural imprint of military conflict on metropolises world wide in the era of the First and Second World Wars It brings together cultural and urban historians and scholars of related disciplines including anthropology education and geography The volume examines how the emergence of total warfare blurred the boundaries between home and front and transformed cities into battlefields The logic of total mobilisation turned the social and cultural fabric of urban life upside down Arranged so as to bring out the evolution of experience over time the essays explore Eastern and Central Europe Britain and Western Europe and Japan and address several key themes The first strand scenarios explores the apocalyptic imagination of intellectuals and experts in peacetime Artists and writers anticipating doom presented the coming upheaval as an urban event a commonplace of late Victorian and post 1918

pessimism On a different plane civil servants and engineers materialised visions of urban chaos and devised countermeasures in case of emergencies Both groups helped to furnish a repertoire of cultural forms which channelled and encoded the actual experience of war The second strand deals with metropolitan experiences notably mobilisation deprivation and destruction in wartime Ruins and the repercussions of war is the central theme of the third strand commemorations which investigates post war efforts to remember and forget The quest for meaningful forms of commemoration was hard enough after the First World War the Second World War which saw whole cities disappear in flames raised the possibility that the limits of representation had been reached The central contention of this volume that total war in the twentieth century has a significant but often overlooked metropolitan dimension is fully addressed thereby filling a conspicuous gap in the currently available literature
