

In an era when instant success is expected, it is salutary to recall that it took a decade for The Booker Prize to take off, to make the front page, to encourage readers to sample the shortlist, to read the winner. The Booker directors were prepared to sit it out and wait, and the year that changed everything was 1980, the year of Golding and Burgess. But Goff thinks it had been building towards it. 'It needed something, there was a catharsis, two heavyweights, it was a good story to write. And from then on people began to see it more and more as a competitive thing.'

Goff recalls that Burgess made it very difficult. But over the years myth and legend have taken over – that Burgess had a direct line from his hotel awaiting the judges' announcement, that he was at his home in Monte Carlo waiting for the call from Goff at about 5 o'clock and then he would come. 'Logistically impossible, of course. It's time for the truth to be set down. In fact he was at the Savoy Hotel in London. He did say to me that there was "no way I'm putting on evening dress and coming unless I know I've won". When the judging was over I rang him from the Guildhall and told him that Golding (for Rites of Passage) had won, and he said, "Right, Martyn, I'm not coming."'
