

Foreword

Foreigners studying Chinese usually learn basic grammatical rules early on. However, as they become more advanced and their vocabulary increases, they encounter difficulties in avoiding mistakes in writing and expressing themselves. This usually puzzles students as the Chinese language appears to be illogical and to follow no rules. There are rules, but some are hard to formulate and there are many exceptions. This is because the Chinese language has no changes that indicate genders, numbers, case, voice, or tense. Instead it is the combination of word order and structural word. This allows the different components of the language to be easily combined but learners often make mistakes. Our teaching experience shows us that the rules of grammar are rigid but the usage allows flexibility. Speaking Chinese: 300 Grammatical Points is based on many years of teaching practice and takes into account the difficulties foreign students have and the mistakes they make. In this book, we have chosen 150 typical mistakes in morphology and syntax. Each grammatical point is presented in pinyin and are explained clearly and concisely in Chinese and in English. We believe that this book would be a great help to all foreigners who wish to study Chinese grammar.

In the process of compiling this book, instructor Wang Xiaoyan translated the morphology part. Here, we would like to express our heartfelt thanks to her for her help.
