The Life of a Colonial Child

The life of a colonial child was tough, but seriously? Families were large, because they had no for you, after children's help with things. Children could do physical work other than just looking on.

They had few toys and no money to spend on them. They had to live before school to keep their families from the poor. They had to work hard to get their families from the poor.

Learning to read and write was considered important for girls. Most were taught to go to school with their families. They worked hard at home, so that they could support their families. Girls had to get feathers off the ground for stuffed pillows, make clothes, spin thread, weave fabrics, and make the house, make furniture, feed the chickens, gather eggs, and clean house.

You might disagree with this, but that's how it was. Life was hard, but it was a life.
