Vocational Philanthropy and British Women's Writing, 1790-1810 Patricia Comitini, 2017-05-15 Patricia Comitini's study compels serious rethinking of how literature by women in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries should be read Beginning with a description of the ways in which evolving conceptions of philanthropy were foundational to constructions of class and gender roles Comitini argues that these changes enabled a particular kind of feminine benevolence that was linked to women's work as writers The term vocational philanthropy is suggestive of the ways that women used their status as professional writers to instruct men and women in changing gender relations and to educate the middling and laboring classes in their new roles during a socially and economically turbulent era Examining works by Hannah More Mary Wollstonecraft Maria Edgeworth and Dorothy Wordsworth whose writing crosses generic political and social boundaries Comitini shows how women from diverse backgrounds shared a commitment to philanthropy fostering the love of mankind and an interest in the social nature of literacy Their writing fosters sentiments that they hoped would be shared between the sexes and among the classes in English society forging new reading audiences among women and the lower classes These writers and their writing exemplify the paradigm of vocational philanthropy which gives people not money but texts to read in order to imagine societal improvement The effect was to permit the emergence of middle class values linking private notions of morality family and love to the public needs for good citizens industrious laborers and class consolidation
