Circulation, Exchange, and the Penal Press

JOSHUA A. MITCHELL

ABSTRACT: In the mid-twentieth century, newspapers were published at nearly every prison in North America. These papers were written, edited, illustrated, and printed by imprisoned staffs, and they were exchanged between editors for journalistic peer review through a network they called the Penal Press. This article describes the methods of production, reception, and most of all distribution of these Penal Press papers, focusing on the practice of trading prison papers across great distances between readers at faraway institutions. It insists that to properly understand the Penal Press, its periodicals must be studied as a collection. The necessity of understanding the Penal Press in this way, however, is circumscribed by the fact that these papers have had no central depository and are scattered in numerous archives across the continent. As Reveal Digital's newly launched American Prison Newspapers database continues to add digitized versions of prison periodicals to its online collection, there is greater hope that a fuller history of the Penal Press will be possible.

Imprisoned authors in North America have written, curated, and circulated writings in newspaper, newsletter, or zine format since the nineteenth century. During a window of time in the mid-twentieth century, this practice developed into a unique interprison franchise in which prison journalists could exchange their papers with peers at other institutions. The exchange of prison publications allowed imprisoned journalists to read, cite, republish, and plagiarize each other's stories, forming a rich dialogue far beyond the boundaries of a single carceral site. Journalists writing for the Candle at Wisconsin State Prison, for instance, read and

Campbell, Barbara Burnaby, 2005-05-18 Although there has been a great deal of rhetoric about learner empowerment in educational and community development circles this book is the first to offer detailed examples of successful participatory practices in adult education spanning a wide range of program settings such as schools institutions communities and the workplace The editors join with practitioner colleagues in the United States and Canada to document successes to network about ideas from active projects past and present that have had a participatory component to share experience new knowledge lessons learned and reflections The focus is on projects initiated with the intention that greater participation would benefit individuals and groups previously excluded from positions of control The aim is to provide concrete models and suggestions to practitioners who want to develop the participatory nature of their own activities from initiation to organization goal setting and ongoing leadership of adult education programs Some chapters give detailed descriptions of the triumphs and challenges in individual projects while others center more on theoretical analysis and reflection on years of experience All however are rooted in particular experiences and give concrete examples from action Participatory Practices in Adult Education is a vital resource for both new and experienced practitioners including basic educators workplace educators administrators policymakers trainers human resource managers and community development workers who want to learn from the practical experiences of their counterparts and is highly appropriate as a text for courses in adult education and community development
