

At college, Jefferson acquired a classical education; but this did not rid his mind of vagueness and sentimentality. John Adams represents the Jeffersonian eighteenth century, with its gross common sense and positivism; Jefferson represents the eighteenth century of dilettantism and sentimentality, of the Noble Savage, and of Chimera — a point which, for some years, was one of Jefferson's obsessions.¹ After graduating from college, Jefferson studied law, beginning to practice in 1775. A successful lawyer, he was soon earning a good income at the bar and also making an unusual profit from his farms — having increased his land-holdings to five thousand acres and become the master of fifty-two slaves. In 1779, he married Martha Wayles Skelton, a young widow whose father shortly died and left a considerable fortune. By this time, Jefferson was moderately wealthy; but money had no more effect than victory upon his deep-seated egalitarianism.

Soon after beginning his career at the bar, Jefferson became a member of the House of Burgesses. By this time the quarrel with England was well under way, and Jefferson joined the extremists on the side of resistance. Opposition to authority was a matter of temperament with Jefferson (years later he was in error when he would let well for his country to have some sort of rebellion every twenty years); the British Government was the upholder of a system of rank and privilege that offended his democratic instincts; and since living in Williamsburg he had come much under the influence of Patrick Henry.

As one of the most gifted among the radicals, Jefferson was sent, in 1775, to the Second Continental Congress. Lacking the logical mind of John Adams, he did not yet perceive that the course he was following must lead to independence. "I would rather," he wrote to his relative, John Randolph, the Loyalist Attorney-General of Virginia, "be in dependence on Great Britain, properly limited, than on any other nation on earth, or than on no nation." The words, "properly limited," make this

¹ He wrote in Memorandum for the Clerk (manuscript) — planning to have that language and make a translation of the text.
